

AUGUST 2026

Sổ Sạch

Vietnam abolished lump-sum tax for 5.2 million household businesses.
They must all keep books now. Almost none of them can.

A working instrument, an eleven-month head start,
and an open question about what it should become.

The customer acquisition was done by the state.

Date	What happened	Reaches
01/01/2026	Lump-sum tax abolished – household businesses must self-declare on real books	5,2M
30/04/2026	First quarterly declaration filed under the new regime	all
31/01/2027	Q4 deadline – and then every quarter, permanently	all
2025-26	Decree 70/2025 – e-invoicing from a connected register above 1 billion VND (now carried in Decree 254/2026, in force 01/07/2026)	upper tier

This is not a market that has to be persuaded. Five million businesses acquired a legal obligation on a fixed date, cannot meet it with a paper notebook, and are penalised for getting it wrong.

A filing habit forms once. Whoever is in the chat the first time a household actually has to file is the one they keep. That is the whole race, and it is running now.

Not a concept. You can open it while we talk.

THE BOT'S ACTUAL PRODUCTION REPLIES

The product runs in production. A household photographs a receipt inside Zalo; the entry is written, the thresholds are watched, and the quarterly 01/CNKD declaration drafts itself.

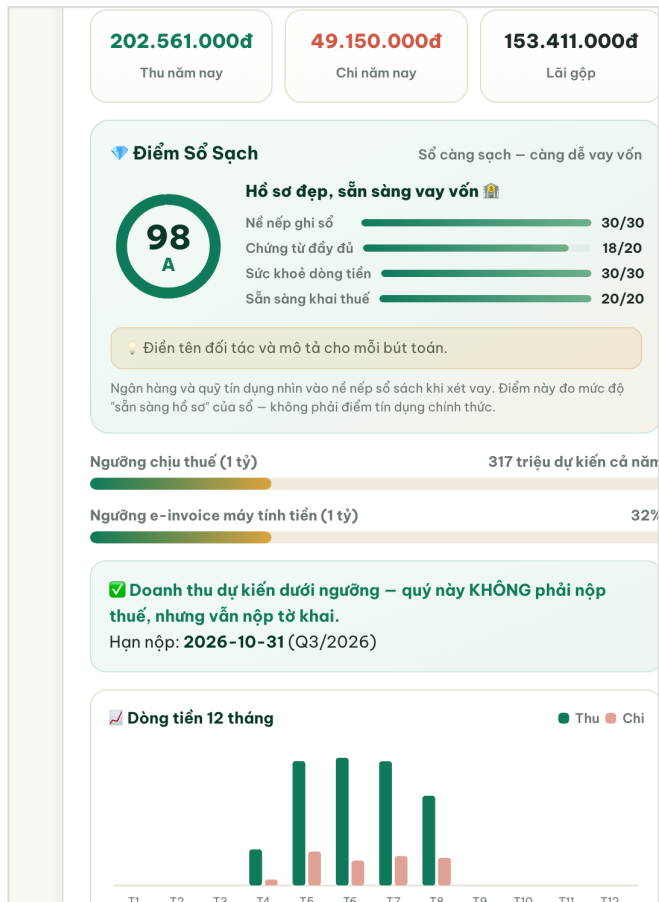

A verified Zalo Official Account. Eleven months, four rejections, a wet-sealed corporate filing, and a Vietnamese company holding its own .com.vn domain. A licence, not a signup.

All of it is checkable without us. sosach.com.vn · the Official Account in Zalo · enterprise code 0316904153 in the public register · the domain at tracuutenmien.gov.vn.

And it moved again this week. The book now mirrors into a Google Sheet the household itself owns – its account, its webhook, no credentials of ours near the data. A one-time claim link turns the Zalo trial into a web account with the history intact, and the bot answers in Vietnamese or English, forgiving one-letter typos behind a safety stop-list.

What does not exist yet: paying customers. We would rather say that first than have you find it.

From photographs to a filed declaration.

FORM 01/CNKD, DRAFTED CONTINUOUSLY FROM THE BOOK

Sample book of a noodle shop, generated by the real engines. The score is deliberately hard: an early version graded every household A, which is worthless to a lender. Below the threshold the declaration shows 0đ due – and says the filing is still owed, which is the misunderstanding that gets households fined.

The things you only learn by shipping this.

Anyone can read the same decrees. These are the parts that are not in them.

- | Nobody photographs revenue. A café does not print a receipt for two hundred coffees. Photographs capture costs; sales arrive as one typed line at closing. A product specified from the outside gets this exactly backwards, then wonders why the books are empty on the income side.
- | The threshold is invisible without a book. The household that crosses one billion VND without noticing is the one who gets hurt – and it cannot know, because not keeping books is the whole reason it is in that position. Warning someone before the tax bites is worth more than filing for them after.
- | Record how much to trust each figure, not just the figure. Every entry is tagged by origin – a photographed document, a typed daily total, a balance carried in from an old notebook. A pile of numbers is a subscription business; a provenance-weighted record of how micro-businesses actually trade is something a lender can underwrite, and nobody here is collecting it that way.
- | This is a correctness product before it is a software product. The first real receipt we processed produced four different ways of being confidently wrong. All four were caught by tests before a single household saw them. Where the output is filed with the tax authority, that discipline is the product – and it now watches the law itself: citations verified weekly against primary sources, and it caught its first drift on day one.

What a five per cent share looks like.

Not a forecast. Public segment size × the entry price – so you can form your own view.

Share of the addressable segment	Households	Revenue / year	USD
1%	18.000	14,9 tỷ VND	≈ $0,6M
3%	54.000	44,7 tỷ VND	≈ $1,8M
5%	90.000	74,5 tỷ VND	≈ $2,9M
10%	180.000	149,0 tỷ VND	≈ $5,8M

The base is 1.8 million – smartphone-active household businesses turning over 200 million to 3 billion VND, where the filing duty is real and the ability to meet it is not. Against the full 5.2 million the same shares are roughly three times these lines.

At 69.000đ a month, and nothing else. No second tier, no services, no e-invoice revenue, no lending – deliberately the most conservative line we can draw, because the interesting question is what the segment is worth at all, not what we can persuade you it is worth.

Five per cent is a distribution problem, not a product one. The instrument exists. Ninety thousand households is not somewhere a founder walks to – it is where a partner with a field force already is.

Separately, both of us are slower.

WHAT WE BRING

A working instrument against a statutory deadline. Eleven months of regulatory groundwork that cannot be compressed. A verified channel into the segment. And the product judgement opposite – learned by shipping to real households, not by reading decrees.

WHAT A PARTNER BRINGS

Distribution at a scale we cannot buy: an existing base, a field force, branches, licences, and people these households already deal with. A Vietnamese ground team. And the balance sheet to treat a five-million-business segment as a programme rather than a pilot.

AND THE HONEST PART

The eleven months are a head start, not a wall. A Vietnamese incumbent can clear the same regulatory barrier – it would simply cost them the same eleven months, against a deadline already running. Which is exactly why the head start is worth something now and less later. We would rather be straight about the shape of the advantage than oversell it.

We are not raising money.

We are trying to work out what this should become, and with whom.

WHAT WE ARE ASKING FOR TODAY

Nothing.

An hour, your reading of the segment, and whether you think this belongs inside a business like yours or alongside one.

WHAT COMES NEXT, IF IT IS INTERESTING

A confidentiality agreement, then the operating detail: the economics, the channel, the scoring and provenance model, the risks, and the things we would not do.

What it is worth is a later conversation. What it could do at scale is this one.
